

Family Planning Queensland's Copyright Guidelines

Since establishment in 1972, FPQ has produced resources to promote sexual and reproductive health for all.

FPQ endeavours to continue to develop high quality resources for use within our clinics, by education and training staff, and for other non-commercial use.

FPQ invests considerable time and resources in order to keep pace with the demand for new resources, and to update and upgrade existing materials. FPQ staff regularly review existing material, revise as needed and map out new resource development needs. This is an important component to fulfilling our education and awareness-raising objectives.

All materials published and owned by FPQ are subject to copyright and cannot be resold, copied, displayed in a public place, reproduced, or republished in any way without prior permission.

Permission may be sought by completing the Copyright Permission Form and posting it to:
